

28 Feb 1978

EVENING STANDARD, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1978-7

Tolmers Square saved

By Mary Macpherson

TOLMERS SQUARE, near Euston Station, blighted for years by plans for a giant office block, has been saved.

The offices, to be built near the underpass in Euston Road, will not be allowed to eat into the square after all.

Instead, they will act as a noise barrier for the houses, which have become a celebrated centre for squatters in recent years.

Members of Camden council's Labour group voted last night in private session to trim earlier office proposals by one-third, thus leaving more room for houses behind the new block.

The decision was taken against the advice of council leaders

EVENING STANDARD, TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1978-7

Tolmers Square saved

By Mary Macpherson

TOLMERS SQUARE, near Euston Station, blighted for years by plans for a giant office block, has been saved.

The offices, to be built near the underpass in Euston Road, will not be allowed to eat into the square after all.

Instead, they will act as a noise barrier for the houses, which have become a celebrated centre for squatters in recent years.

Members of Camden council's Labour group voted last night in private session to trim earlier office proposals by one-third, thus leaving more room for houses behind the new block.

The decision was taken against the advice of council leaders